Course Objectives

The purpose of this class is to deepen the content of the master's thesis by accumulating research presentations and discussions by students each time. Several faculty members with different specialties provide advice and suggestion so that the objectivity of research can be ensured even in different specialized fields and that research is proceeding within a logical framework.

Course Contents

In this class, students make presentation under the participation multiple teachers. From the 2nd to the 7th, several students make research presentations and receive comments from faculty members in specialized fields close to each presenter to deepen the discussion in the master's thesis. In the 8th to 13th sessions, faculty members in specialized fields far from the research theme will confirm whether objective and logical research is being conducted and give advice. In the final 14th round, students will hold an interim presentation of the master's thesis to confirm how to proceed with the research toward the summer vacation.

Course Title	Anthropology of Tourism(2)
Instructor	Kuzuno Hiroaki
Semester	Spring Semester	Credit	2 Credits
Course Number	TRG5100	Language	Japanese

Course Objectives

According to the United Nations happiness evaluation, Finland has been the number one in the world for the last five years, and has received a lot of attention from both the world and Japan. In addition, the number of Japanese traveling abroad has not increased in the last 30 years, but the number of Japanese traveling to Finland, which is far and expensive, is increasing year by year. In this class, we will consider trends in contemporary Finland travel, which are difficult to understand from the concept of tourism alone, through presentations and discussions by students. Through classes, students in the Master's Program are expected to flexibly relativize and expand their own perspectives on tourism activities and tourism resources.

Course Contents

When the OECD's Program for International Student Assessment (PISA) draws attention to the high academic ability of Finnish students, many Japanese, not to mention educators, will visit Finnish schools. Schools and education are by no means a tourism resource in the narrow sense, but they attract a large number of people to Finland. Similarly, there are many people who visit and inspect the welfare sites for the elderly in Finland. In addition, Scandinavian design and Moomin are not tourism resources in a narrow sense, but are familiar cultural elements that many Japanese people admire and interact with in Japan on a daily basis, but they are linked to the glittering concept of Scandinavian lifestyle. However, it is strongly attracting people to Finland. In this class, we will take up the various faces of Finnish society and culture as described in the lesson plan below, and consider how they are linked to Finland travel and its appeal.
