授業の目標 (Course Objectives)

The goal of this course are:

- To introduce students to cognitive and evolutionary psychology research on religion and ritual
- To improve students abilities to review research and think critically about studies
- To improve students abilities to communicate their opinions about research

授業の内容 (Course Contents)

The special course on psychology examines contemporary research on religion and ritual conducted from an evolutionary and cognitive perspective. Although many people in Japan and in the West do not follow any specific religion, the majority of people across the world believe in and belong to religious groups. Furthermore, rituals are important in all societies and even non-religious people often hold some supernatural beliefs. This course examines religion and ritual as topics of psychology looking at modern research on the effects of religious belief and ritual participation. Each week students are introduced to a key topic through a lecture and engage in group discussion on selected research related to that topic. Students are required to make two presentations on selected topics during the course. The course is suitable for students for all English levels as the course contents will be adjusted according to the level of the students. By the end of the course students will be familiar with the key theories on religion/ritual and have gained experience in discussing research and presenting their opinions in English.
